11. (C) Summary: FM Lavrov's disinterest in establishing an expert level dialogue on arms sales begs the question of how best to address our cc

Russian Arms Sales Matter

12. (C) Russian arms sales are consequential, totaling approximately USD 6.7 billion in 2006, according to official figures. This amount reflec

13. (C) While no sales were reported in 2006 to Iran, Syria, or Sudan, in 2007 Iran reportedly paid Russia USD 700 million for TOR-M1 air defer

15. (C) While concrete numbers are hard to come by, our best figures indicate that Russian arms sales to its traditional big-ticket customers - MOSCOW 00005154 002 OF 004 2.6 billion, but not all deliveries and payments have been made. While Russian experts still downplay the ability of the U.S. to displace Russi

A Legalistic World View

16. (S) As the recent 2 2 consultations confirmed, Russian officials defend arms sales to countries of concern in narrow legal terms. In answer

17. (S) What Russia has not done is accept our strategic calculus and rule out the possibility of sales to Iran, Syria, Sudan, or Venezuela. Th

What Is Behind the Russian Calculus

18. (C) A variety of factors drive Russian arms sales, but a compelling motivation is profit - both licit and illicit. As former Deputy Prime M MOSCOW 00005154 003 OF 004 helicopter production, is further proof of the importance the Putin government places on the industry.

19. (C) Likewise, it is an open secret that the Russian defense industry is an important trough at which senior officials feed, and weapons sal

10. (C) A second factor driving the Russian arms export policy is the desire to enhance Russia's standing as a "player" in areas where Russia

11. (C) A third and related factor lurking under the surface of these weapons sales is Russia's inferiority complex with respect to the United

Taking Another Run At Russia

12. (C) As FM Lavrov made clear during the 2 2 consultations, Russia will not engage systematically at the expert level on its arms export req
